the grey gallery

An aerial photograph of Orfordness, a coastal area in Suffolk, England. The image is overlaid with a grid. A white text box in the top left contains a quote and the name Simon Read. The map shows a river or inlet winding through the land, with various colored overlays: a red line along the coast, a blue line, and a green line. In the bottom right, there are concentric circles and other graphical elements.

Plots and Plans:

"I have always considered drawing to be a means of coming to grips with an idea on the assumption that if I can generate a satisfactory graphic solution, there is a chance that I shall also have reached a more satisfactory grasp of its subject.

More recently I have become preoccupied by the immediacy of our environmental predicament. Living on the Suffolk Coast, this has become a real presence in daily life. Drawing is a way into this debate for me and through it I feel able to negotiate the huge range of specialist data that might otherwise reduce me to a sense of impotence."
